A COLONY OF NATTERJACKS.

One day in June, 1871, with my curious instinct in "full swing," I happened to be strolling on a small heath a few miles from Kingston, Alabama, and saw a somewhat noteworthy discovery. In a quarter of an acre of heath are several small pools, which at the proper season absolutely swarm with aquatic creatures. On the above day, after spending some time in exploring these pools, I was about retracing my steps to the high-road, when a very dandy of a toad ran across the heath in a lighter and more active than ordinary toads. He carried a bright yellow stripe down the back. This was my first introduction to the curious natterjack (Bufo calamita). He did not seem to be greatly prepossessed with my appearance, however, and scrambled away in the most surprising fashion; so that to get at all a correct idea of his appearance I was compelled to gently detain him with my stick. Compared with the bloated garden-toad, he had a keenness in pronouncing my new acquaintance to be a decidedly handsome fellow. What he thought of me I know not. Being anxious to witness his aquatic gyrations, I used a little persuasion with my stick and induced him to take to the water, where, after splashing and frolicking in a way as vigorously as a frog, he attempted land, but being unable to get up the foresaid stick, he sat upright in the shallows and stared at me with the most doleful expression of countenance. Presently a hoarse croak rose in the air; my acquaintance started, and so did I. We soon found out the cause; for, on the opposite side of the pool, and perched on a high bank, was natterjack No. 2. He was croaking as we approached, and I broke. Discarding my first acquaintance, I stopped across to welcome No. 2, but he suddenly ceased his song, and took a desperate "header" into the pool. In June of the following year I learned a little more about "natterjacks," or, in other words, I became more conversant with the internal history of the life of the above mentioned toad. One day, while peering about the pools for the eggs or ova of the Bufo; and, but how to distinguish between the spawn of calamita and that of virgatus I know not. This beautiful spawn (I say beautiful, with emphasis) is in the shape of double strings of clear, transparent jelly or gluten, in which are embedded indiscriminately the jet-black, bead-like eggs of the one or the other of the dipnary shok. These strings of ova were wound round the weeds and about the stones at the bottom of the pool in the most singular and fantastic way. On my next visit (July 18th) the pool was peopled with hundreds of black tadpoles, frisking, wriggling, and twirling boiling, pretence, and violent gesticulation is exhibited. Natural means are often apparent, but the necessary cultivation is wanting. Another false method of "splitting the singer's groundlings," has only recently come into vogue, and is now the fashion of high notes, supposed to be to the full extent of the singer's lungs, at the finish of a solo, as if the attainment of an ut de poitrine or "screeamer" was the very perfection of vocal art. This piece of claptrap is wholly uncalculated for, and is quite unworthy the attention it receives; yet some of the best artists of the day, in other respects have been misled by it. The result is, that owing to the taste of the unthinking and shallow portion of their listeners. Such devices to obtain applause from the unthinking incapabilities, who unfortunately too often form the audience, should be repudiated by singers who are capable of better things, and whose art-conscience must cry "shame" at the exhibition of such a piece of imposture. The foremost reason of the ladder should show a better example to those of their brothers and sisters who are below them. Besides, these high notes, and these liberties with the music, are often—more often than not, particularly when introduced by singers who have no knowledge of the science of harmony—as Mr. Stoddard very justly says, a violation of nearly every rule of music, and which is the only exception, "that two different harmonies must not be sounded at the same time." Again, how seldom are soloists met with who sing Handel's or Rossini's florid music with clearness and flexibility; and how few, in the simplest passages of oratorio, are capable of singing with sufficient religious pythos and fervour to give to the words the "sacredness" they want of soul, this mechanical production of so many notes in a given time, is easily observable in our day; and yet instances are known of the astonishing instances some great singers have had over their hearers. When Parinelli sang before Charles VI. at Vienna, the emperor, after he had listened to him, said, "I have never known, that whilst singing, be neither stood nor moved like a human being"—all was supernatural. "But," added the emperor, "these magnificent strides, these never-ending notes, are altogether unbecoming, and it is now time that you should think of pleasing." You are too much in love with your gifts, and if you wish to reach the heights of greatness, you must learn to be the simplest of men. These few words taught the singer a lesson that he never forgot, and henceforth he studied to be simple and pathetic, as well as grand and powerful. What a thousand pities it is that some of our public singers could not receive a similar hint and profit by it!—Trinette's Magazine.

is scarcely necessary to add, on this subject of art in Russia, that great pains are taken to adorn the churches with the finest work that can be procured.—Victoria Maga-—We are ready to be happy to-day, but tomorrow we will be wiser, another year, our cup of joy will be full. We are too eager in the pursuit of pleasure to take time to be happy today. How often we look back on years gone by, and see many elements of distress and sorrow, which at the time we took no notice of, and which, could we count them in now, would fill our cup of joy to overflowing. Shall I learn a lesson from life?
